Identifying Risks, Managing Disputes, and Delivering Results That Matter

Anne is a skilled litigator with over eight years of experience in courtroom advocacy and dispute resolution. She is committed to achieving tailored solutions that align with her clients' specific goals, whether through litigation or alternative resolution methods.

Anne has extensive experience in Personal Injury litigation, representing both plaintiffs and defendants in cases involving motor vehicle accidents, medical negligence, and insurance claims. This dual perspective has sharpened her skills in negotiation, risk assessment, and strategic decision-making, allowing her to anticipate challenges and develop well-rounded solutions. She now applies these strengths to a wide range of business disputes, including patent issues, shareholder conflicts, product liability claims, and employment matters such as workplace discrimination, human rights issues, and wrongful dismissal.

Her background includes experience working in Information Technology for Alberta Health Services, where she developed a strong understanding of leveraging technology to improve efficiency. She applies this expertise by staying ahead of advancements in legal technology and employing tools that streamline processes, enhance risk identification, and create efficiencies that directly benefit her clients.

Anne takes a proactive approach to risk management, helping businesses to minimize disruption and address potential challenges before they escalate. By simplifying complex legal issues and focusing on practical, forward-thinking solutions, she empowers clients to make informed decisions with confidence.

Clients appreciate Anne's thorough preparation, clear communication, and strategic mindset, which ensure no detail is overlooked. Whether advocating in court or developing preventive strategies, Anne provides reliable guidance that is carefully tailored to her clients' unique needs and long-term objectives.
