McLeod Law Update to our Clients in Response to the COVID-19 Pandemic

May 11, 2020

Since we closed our physical offices and began to work remotely, we continue to service our client's while safeguarding the health of everyone. Like all organizations, we have had to review our systems with a view to maintaining physical distancing, while still executing our roles as trusted legal advisors. We have implemented procedures, such as virtual and drive-thru signings, video mediations and questionings, and remote interviews and consultations.

We are pleased that our years of technology investment has allowed us to transition to remote working. We understand that our provincial health authorities have authorized a gradual and phased reopening of the Alberta economy.

Our clients and the public have had many questions about the impact of COVID-19 on the legal landscape. We have answered many questions with webinars, articles, and simply speaking to our clients. Please refer to our COVID-19 Resources for more updates.

You may also access the global COVID-19 Knowledge Centre from TAGLaw, our alliance network of 160+ independent law firms.

We hope that you, your loved ones and friends remain healthy and safe. If you have questions please call us — we're here to assist you.
